

DEPARTMENT MEN MOURNING DEMISE OF ENTOMOLOGIST

Daniel W. Coquillett Was Inventor of Insect Destroyer.

In the death of Daniel William Coquillett, the Department of Agriculture has lost the entomologist who invented the hydro-vac method of purging orchards of insect pests and who discovered the usefulness of the Vedalia beetle as a destroyer of the true scale insect.

Officials of the department today expressed deep regret over the death of the man whose activities in Government research work have been crowned with such splendid results.

Authority on Mosquitoes.
Dr. Coquillett was one of the foremost authorities on the classification of the mosquitoes, and his work in this field, as well as in the other branches of entomology, which led to his discovery of fumigating methods and the manner in which the scale insect may be combated, gave promise that he would be of invaluable service to the Government, said one of the men who had worked with him.

Job Made for Him

E. LIVINGSTONE CORNELIUS
The old Senate employee who has been chosen Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms.

Position Created for Old Senate Employee

The honor of having a position created for him was bestowed upon E. Livingstone Cornelius, when the Senate Committee on Rules passed a resolution, introduced by Senator Lodge, which established the position of Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate. Mr. Cornelius will assume his new duties at once. He has been clerk to Col. Daniel Ransdell, Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, since 1900, and by his faithful, efficient services, and familiarity with the duties of the office has won deserved promotion.

Mr. Cornelius is one of the most popular of the Senate employees. He is a native of Maryland, but has lived in the Capital in recent years. He was secretary to Colonel Ransdell when he was marshal of the District in 1890, and served in like capacity to Colonel Ransdell's immediate successors, Marshall, Wilson and Palmer.

TAFT TO DELEGATE NEGRO LAWYER TO SPEAK FOR HIM

Assistant Attorney General
Will Address Conference at Denver.

President Taft has begun to make use of his most important negro appointee. Assistant Attorney General William H. Lewis was today authorized to attend the Negro National Educational Congress at Denver, Col., as the representative of the Administration. Some time ago this body asked the President to send some representative to deliver a speech at this meeting. Lewis was preferred. At first the President was disinclined to send the Assistant Attorney General, but he later reconsidered the matter, and today it was announced at the White House that the Boston attorney would go.

Some of the friends of the Administration are wondering today if the use of Lewis to make speeches about the country will, after all, prove to be good politics. It was announced when he was appointed that there was no politics in the matter, but it has begun to appear that Lewis will be used wherever it is necessary to show the President's friendliness for the colored race.

Memorial Plans Ready.
Senator Cullom called at the White House today, and was told by the President that the Lincoln memorial plans would soon be ready for the Memorial Commission to review. These plans are now in the hands of the Fine Arts Commission, and when the report of that body is made, it will indicate where the $200,000 is to be spent and the design that should be used.

Senator Wetmore, chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library, and head of the commission to select a design for a Columbus memorial at the Union Station, told the President that the commission would meet in this city on July 15. At this time it is expected the design for this memorial will be finally selected.

Mr. Hughes was born in Illinois in 1842. For the past twenty-one years he lived in Washington and was employed as a clerk in the Pension Bureau.

Senator Owen's Mother To Be Buried Tomorrow

Mrs. Narcissa Owen, mother of the Senator from Oklahoma, and whose funeral takes place tomorrow, was a Cherokee Indian by descent on her father's side.

Mrs. Narcissa Owen was the daughter of Thomas Chisholm, the last of the hereditary chiefs of the Cherokee. Back of her the line goes thus: His mother was Martha Holmes, daughter of Peggy Holmes, who was the child of the Rev. John Beamor and his Indian wife. This Mrs. Beamor was the sister of the chief of the Cherokee, and her marriage in 1800 to the young missionary is as strange a romance if not as famous a one as that of John Rolfe and Pocahontas.

Mrs. Owen moved to Indian Territory with her son when he became of age and it was largely through her influence that he obtained his first position with the Government, that of Indian agent for the five civilized tribes.
